

Frank Chiodo was a teacher, coach (football and boys basketball, both sophomore and varsity), and athletic director at U-High for about thirty years. He was also coordinator of clinical experiences for the Laboratory Schools.

His philosophy was "We aren't here just to teach high school kids, we're here to help make better men and women for tomorrow." Frank established an endowment at U-High to provide funds for students who want to play athletics but who require financial assistance. Frank personally purchased glasses, mittens, winter coats, and football shoes for students who couldn't afford them. He also assisted boys in finding summer jobs when they needed either the financial help or the discipline and responsibility of having a job. Frank was always willing to help guide young people.
